About the Book

In A LONG WAY GONE: Memoirs of a Boy Soldier, Beah, tells a powerfully gripping story. At the age of twelve, he fled attacking rebels and wandered a land rendered unrecognizable by violence. By thirteen, he'd been picked up by the government army, and Beah, at heart a gentle boy, found that he was capable of truly terrible acts. At sixteen, he was removed from fighting by UNICEF, and through the help of the staff at his rehabilitation center, he learned how to forgive himself, to regain his humanity, and, finally, to heal. Reflections of Erin
 The Importance of Belonging,
 Relationships, and Learning with Each Other

By Barbara McKenzie, Design by Chris McKenzie, Art of Possibility Press, 2008

A NEW BOOK ABOUT REDISCOVERING THE VISION OF INCLUSION

About the Book

When the inclusive education movement began several years ago, many used the argument that it was purely for social benefits. The curriculum used for children with disabilities that were placed in general education classrooms was often very different from what was being taught in those classrooms. Slowly the movement began to stress the importance of accessing the curriculum and making accommodations, modifications, or enhancements as needed so that ALL students could learn together.

In recent years the focus has been on academic standards and identifying deficits, which has often led to more sorting, pull-out, and remediation for a variety of students, including those with disabilities, rather than inclusive classrooms and schools. The importance of discovering the gifts of each person, developing relationships, and embracing our interdependence are often not considered as valid in evidence-based research and standards, curriculum development, or instructional practices.

Barbara McKenzie hopes to shift the focus back to creating inclusive learning communities by sharing evidence that she and others have gathered from the experience of knowing and loving Erin. Conveyed in the form of keen observations, heartfelt surprises, and insightful reflections, the stories and images inspired by Erin McKenzie's life demonstrate the rich connections and relationships that result from an inclusive learning community.

About the Author

Barbara McKenzie is an advocate, presenter, and organizer of gatherings about the importance of creating inclusive communities. In college during the late '60s, she considered herself a social justice activist, but when Erin was born and diagnosed with a disability, she realized how much she had to learn about welcoming everyone and discovering the gifts in each of us. Over the last two decades she has continued to learn with dear friends and leaders in the movement for full inclusion. With the loving support of her family, her passion has grown and endures.

A man reads to fall asleep. He begins to dream of his books. "Rebecca", "Mrs. Danver's", "Scarlet O'Hara", "Jane Eyre", "Mark Twain" and others visit him during his night. Join us for a humorous look at a series of parodies of literary characters!

"The Otterbein Room" Moves into New Facility

The Otterbein Room has moved! Over the past three weeks the historical collection of the college has moved from its cramped quarters on the third floor of the Courtright Memorial Library to the basement area formerly occupied by WOCC-TV. This move doubles the amount of storage space available to the archives, which will allow the many treasures of Otterbein's past to be properly displayed for the first time in over a decade. Archivist Stephen D. Grinch and his team of student workers will spend Fall quarter and Christmas break organizing the collections and preparing the new museum space, which will be named in memory of Alice Salt. During this time the Otterbein Room will be open by appointment only, Monday through Friday between 10:00 and 6:00. To schedule an appointment please call Stephen at (614) 823 - 1761 or contact him via e-mail at sgrinch@otterbein.edu.

The area previously occupied by the Archives will be the new home to Center for Teaching and Learning.
